

THE OUTPOST: THE DOWNLINE

TSU Film 10 — Release Phase 2, Film 4 — the "Guardians of the Galaxy" release slot

THE PITCH

Platform: THE OUTPOST — TSU's fictional 1:1 counterpart to Discord (per TSU_Platform_Roster.md, Phase 3 — "Started as a tool for one specific tribe and quietly became the internet's town hall of private nations... hidden in plain sight.") Fixed launch anchor: 2015, per TSU_Continuity_Bible.md §3 — honored exactly, no change requested.

Why THE OUTPOST is the perfect Guardians of the Galaxy slot: Guardians doesn't add a hero to the existing team — it introduces an entirely new corner of the universe, populated by people the audience has never met, who don't know each other, don't like each other much at first, and would never be described as heroes by anyone including themselves. Per TSU_Continuity_Bible.md §2, "Satire, dialed carefully" is explicitly reserved for THE SWARM and THE ENGINE storylines and is described as "TSU's comic-relief valve, same job Ant-Man/Guardians plays tonally inside a heavier universe" — this slot was written into the house style before this film existed. None of the core seven lead it. That's the point.

Who this film belongs to: A brand-new found family, assembled from the Extended Ensemble's dormant Wildcards. Kwame "K-Dot" Ashford-Petrov (the Star-Lord position — swagger, a hustle gone sideways, zero interest in fame and enormous interest in money). Benji Oyelaran-Cox (the Rocket position — prickly technical genius, one film removed from scripts/THE_FRAME_2.md's redemption, finally building something that's entirely their own). Sister Rosalind Okonjo (the Groot position — a genuine nun, gentle, load-bearing, says less than everyone else and means more of it). Felicity Drummond-Asante (the Gamora position — guarded, sharp, a rival-dynasty former child star who joins for her own reasons and ends up being the reason the team survives).

In-universe timeline: January 2015 – June 2015. THE OUTPOST's launch is fixed at 2015 (Phase 3 closes) per TSU_Continuity_Bible.md §3 — this script locks the public launch to June 2015. None of these four are core-seven members, so no birthdate cross-checks against TSU_Core_Cast.md apply; ages are established fresh in this film (all early-to-mid 30s, consistent with their existing bible entries' timelines relative to the core seven).

LOGLINE

A crypto hustler with a grabbed flash drive he doesn't understand, a disgraced hacker trying to build something that's finally his own, a nun who runs the best-moderated Discord server nobody's heard of, and a former child star who trusts exactly nobody get thrown together by accident, discover they're sitting on proof that the internet's most beloved wellness guru is running a nine-figure pyramid scheme, and have to build a place sturdy enough to protect it before she buys, infiltrates, or destroys them first.

SYNOPSIS

Kwame "K-Dot" Ashford-Petrov has never once in his life turned down a hustle that smelled like money, which is how he ends up walking out of a very wrong meeting with a flash drive he was absolutely not supposed to have, thinking it's crypto wallet keys. It's not. It's four years of internal financial records belonging to Desiree Holloway — the wellness industry's most beloved face, host of a nine-figure "abundance mentorship" empire that is, provably, a pyramid scheme with extra crystals — handed off by a nervous internal accountant who got the wrong guy's contact info and doesn't yet know it.

K-Dot, in over his head immediately, calls the only person he trusts with a hard drive full of trouble: Benji Oyelaran-Cox, a few months removed from the very public, very humbling end of a very bad three years, currently building something small, private, and entirely their own — a little invite-only server for people who just want somewhere that isn't owned by anyone with a board to answer to. Benji doesn't want the drama. Benji's server, it turns out, already has forty members who are Desiree Holloway's recruits, organizing quietly, comparing notes, slowly realizing what they've been sold into — moderated, unpaid, with genuine skill, by Sister Rosalind Okonjo, who built the rules herself because her parish youth group needed somewhere safe to talk and nobody official got there first.

Desiree finds out about the drive within forty-eight hours — her operation has better internal security than three of the core seven's companies combined, which is its own kind of joke — and sends people to get it back by whatever means necessary, "necessary" defined generously. K-Dot, Benji, and Sister Rosalind end up needing a fourth set of skills fast: Felicity Drummond-Asante, the rival-dynasty former child star who has spent her entire adult life being underestimated by exactly the kind of people Desiree Holloway preys on, and who has her own reasons — a mother, briefly, disastrously "mentored" by Desiree years ago — for wanting this specific woman's empire to end.

None of them like each other much at first. K-Dot thinks Benji's too paranoid; Benji thinks K-Dot's a liability; Felicity thinks all of them are amateurs; Sister Rosalind quietly out-strategizes everyone in the room and says almost nothing about it. What starts as four people trying to survive a bad forty-eight hours becomes, slowly, over a genuinely funny and increasingly high-stakes few months, an actual found family — and a decision: they don't just leak the data and disappear. They build the server Sister Rosalind was already running, properly, permanently, into something bigger — a real home for the people Desiree preys on, run by nobody's board, safe from exactly the kind of institutional capture this franchise has spent nine films warning about.

Desiree tries everything — a buyout offer disguised as a "wellness partnership," a plant inside the beta, a threatened lawsuit, and finally, publicly, live at her own empire's biggest annual event, a live demonstration meant to discredit the whole platform as a scam run by "bitter has-beens and internet trolls." It backfires spectacularly: Felicity's own testimony, Sister Rosalind's calm, devastating moral clarity, Benji's technical proof, and K-Dot's genuinely undeniable charm turn Desiree's own stage into the site of her downline's mass, public, viral defection. THE OUTPOST launches publicly that same week — chaotic, funny, real, run by four people who didn't know each other five months ago and now, unmistakably, do. Desiree, per the Villains Bench's rules for THE SWARM, is not caught, not prosecuted, not finished — just rebranded, already testing a new name for the next version of the exact same grift, somewhere else, for someone else's franchise to eventually deal with.

THE ANTAGONISTS

Per the Villains Bench rules (TSU_Continuity_Bible.md §5), and per the house style's explicit assignment of Guardians' slot to satire.

1. DESIREE HOLLOWAY (THE SWARM's human face) — a wellness-and-abundance mentorship mogul, genuinely magnetic, genuinely believes her own pitch some of the time, running a nine-figure pyramid scheme with real victims and real, extremely online charisma. Per the Villains Bench's own rule, she is never fully defeated — only rebranded, the same parasitic subculture reskinning itself the way it always has (per her category's bible entry: "bloggers -> YouTubers -> Instagram influencers -> TikTokers"; here, the wellness-guru-to-abundance-coach pipeline).
2. THE ENGINE, tenth manifestation, played almost entirely for comedy this time — THE OUTPOST's earliest server-recommendation system is hilariously, chaotically bad at matching people to communities, recommending Sister Rosalind's youth-group server to cryptocurrency day traders and vice versa, a rare full activation of the Villains Bench's mandate that satire is where THE ENGINE gets to be funny instead of frightening.
3. DESIREE'S "WELLNESS SECURITY" TEAM — not a single mastermind, a genuinely absurd, over-resourced private security apparatus built to protect a scented-candle empire, treated throughout as comic rather than menacing, in keeping with the house style's "dialed carefully" satire mandate.

HOW THIS FILM EXPANDS THE FRANCHISE

- A wholly new found family, exactly as the slot requires: none of the core seven lead this film, mirroring Guardians' own refusal to reuse the existing team — the first time in ten films this franchise has done that.
- Four dormant Wildcards, activated together on schedule: K-Dot, Sister Rosalind, and Felicity were all introduced in TSU_Extended_Ensemble.md explicitly to "pull the world outward into a different subculture the founders wouldn't otherwise touch" — this is the film where all three finally get used at once, alongside Benji's continuing arc.
- THE SWARM's first true activation: present in the Villains Bench since the Platform Roster's earliest draft, never dramatized until now — and, per its own rules, deliberately left uncaught.
- The house style's satire mandate, finally cashed in: TSU_Continuity_Bible.md §2 named this exact tonal register for this exact narrative need years of in-universe continuity before this film existed.
- A genuine tonal breath before Release Phase 2's finale: the found-family levity here is deliberate contrast heading into whatever ensemble-scale stakes Film 11 (the Age of Ultron slot) will require.

FULL SCENE-BY-SCENE BREAKDOWN

ACT I — pp. 1–32 ("Wrong Flash Drive")

#	Scene	pp.
1	EXT. PARKING GARAGE — NIGHT, JAN 2015 — K-Dot walks out of a meeting with a flash drive that is not the one he was promised	1–4
2	INT. K-DOT'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — he plugs it in; four years of Desiree Holloway's real books, in full	4–7
3	INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — DAY — Benji, small, quiet, building a private server for a handful of people, wants none of this	7–10

#	Scene	pp.
4	INSERT — THE SERVER — Sister Rosalind Okonjo moderating forty members, several of them Desiree's own recruits, comparing notes	10–13
5	INT. DESIREE HOLLOWAY'S OFFICE — DAY — Desiree learns the drive is missing within a day; her "wellness security" team mobilizes, entirely too well-funded for what it is	13–17
6	INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — K-Dot arrives, uninvited, with a problem Benji did not ask for	17–20
7	EXT. FELICITY DRUMMOND-ASANTE'S HOME — DAY — Felicity, sharp, unimpressed, recognizes Desiree's name immediately and for personal reasons	20–24
8	INT. SISTER ROSALIND'S PARISH OFFICE — DAY — Sister Rosalind reveals how many of her server's members are already Desiree's victims	24–27
9	EXT. STREET — DAY — first close call with Desiree's security team; the four are, for the first time, in the same room by necessity	27–30
10	INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — the four agree, reluctantly, to work together for exactly as long as it takes to be safe. Act I turn.	30–32

ACT II — pp. 33–97 ("The Downline")

#	Scene	pp.
11	MONTAGE — GETTING TO KNOW EACH OTHER BADLY — four strangers, wildly mismatched skill sets, comic friction	33–37

#	Scene	pp.
12	INT. DESIREE'S OFFICE — DAY — the buyout offer: a "wellness partnership" for Benji's little server, generous, obviously a trap	37–40
13	INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — the four turn it down, unanimously, the first thing they've agreed on without arguing	40–43
14	INSERT — THE ENGINE, EARLY BUILD — the server's recommendation system hilariously mismatches every new member for a week straight	43–45
15	EXT. LOS ANGELES — DAY — a second close call, funnier and more dangerous than the first, in roughly equal measure	45–49
16	INT. FELICITY'S HOME — NIGHT — Felicity tells the others about her mother's disastrous experience with Desiree years ago	49–53
17	INT. K-DOT'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — K-Dot, uncharacteristically serious, admits the hustle stopped being about money days ago	53–56
18	INT. SISTER ROSALIND'S PARISH OFFICE — DAY — Sister Rosalind's one real speech of the film, short, devastating, entirely without raised voice	56–59
19	INT. DESIREE'S OFFICE — DAY — a plant is placed inside the growing server's beta	59–62
20	INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — NIGHT — the plant is discovered; the group's first real internal argument about trust. Midpoint.	62–66

#	Scene	pp.
21	EXT. LOS ANGELES — NIGHT — the group, mid-argument, gets ambushed by Desiree's security team — the film's biggest, funniest action beat	66–71
22	INT. SAFE HOUSE (K-DOT'S COUSIN'S GARAGE) — NIGHT — recovering, the group actually starts operating like a team for the first time	71–75
23	INT. FELICITY'S HOME — DAY — Felicity, Marc-Anthony Bullock cameo (phone call only) — the first acknowledgment this story shares a world with the mainline films	75–78
24	INT. GARAGE — DAY — the decision: don't just leak the data and vanish. Build the real thing Sister Rosalind already started, properly	78–82
25	MONTAGE — BUILDING THE OUTPOST — four people, actually working together, actually enjoying it	82–87
26	INT. DESIREE'S OFFICE — DAY — a threatened lawsuit; Desiree, cornered for the first time, escalates to a public confrontation instead	87–91
27	INT. GARAGE — NIGHT — the plan: Desiree's own empire's biggest annual event, live, on her own stage	91–94
28	EXT. GARAGE — NIGHT — the four, for the first time, call themselves something like a team out loud. Closes Act II.	94–97

ACT III — pp. 98–127 ("The Empire Event")

#	Scene	pp.
29	EXT. DESIREE HOLLOWAY'S "ABUNDANCE SUMMIT" — DAY — arrival, in disguise, among ten thousand attendees	98–101
30	INT. SUMMIT — MAIN STAGE — Desiree, mid-keynote, attempts to preemptively discredit "a handful of internet trolls." Climax begins.	101–104
31	INT. SUMMIT — MAIN STAGE, CONTINUOUS — Felicity takes the stage uninvited, testimony about her own mother, undeniable	104–108
32	INT. SUMMIT — MAIN STAGE, CONTINUOUS — Benji's financial proof, displayed live, cross-referenced in real time	108–111
33	INT. SUMMIT — MAIN STAGE, CONTINUOUS — Sister Rosalind, calm, devastating, addressing Desiree directly rather than the crowd	111–114
34	INT. SUMMIT — CONTINUOUS — K-Dot, charm at full volume, turns the crowd's own energy against Desiree without raising his voice either	114–117
35	INSERT — MASS DEFECTION — thousands of Desiree's own downline, live, joining THE OUTPOST's public beta in real time	117–119
36	EXT. SUMMIT PARKING LOT — DAY (AFTER) — Desiree, cornered, already rehearsing a new name for the next version of the same gift	119–121
37	INT. GARAGE — DAY — THE OUTPOST launches publicly, chaotic, funny, real	121–124
38	EXT. GARAGE — NIGHT — the four, a genuine found family now, decide to keep running it together	124–126

#	Scene	pp.
39	STINGER — INT. DESIREE'S NEW OFFICE, UNMARKED — DAY — Desiree, already testing a new brand name on a whiteboard, unbothered	126–127

(Scenes grouped for pagination clarity; the full shooting script breaks several of the above into additional numbered scenes to land the true count at 45 per the house-style table above.)

FADE IN:
EXT. PARKING GARAGE — NIGHT
SUPER: "JANUARY 2015"
KWAME "K-DOT" ASHFORD-PETROV, early 30s, walks fast toward his car, flash drive clutched like it might bite him, looking over his shoulder in the specific way of a man who already knows he's made a mistake and is still doing math on how bad.
	K-DOT (to himself) Wallet keys. Just crypto wallet keys. Easiest four thousand dollars of your life, Kwame.
He gets in the car. Plugs the drive into a laptop balanced on the passenger seat, engine still running.
INSERT — LAPTOP SCREEN
Not wallet keys. Spreadsheets. Years of them. Names, numbers, a corporate letterhead reading "HOLLOWAY ABUNDANCE GROUP, INTERNAL — DO NOT DISTRIBUTE."
	K-DOT (CONT'D) (long beat, staring at the screen) ...That is a significant amount of not wallet keys.

INT. BENJI'S APARTMENT — NIGHT [p. 17]

Small, precise, deliberately unglamorous. BENJI OYELARAN-COX, early 20s, several months removed from the events of `scripts/THE_FRAME_2.md`, opens the door to find K-DOT already mid-sentence.

K-DOT

– and I need somewhere to put this that isn't my apartment, isn't my cousin's apartment, and definitely isn't anywhere with my actual name on the lease.

BENJI

(not moving from the doorway)
I just got done being the reason a predictive-suppression algorithm existed for three years. I am extremely unavailable for whatever this is.

K-DOT

It's a flash drive.

BENJI

It's never just a flash drive.

K-DOT

(beat)
Okay, it's a flash drive that proves Desiree Holloway's whole empire is a pyramid scheme, and her security team already knows it's missing, and I don't have anywhere else to go.

Benji stares at him a long moment. Sighs. Steps aside.

BENJI

You have twenty minutes before I make you leave regardless of how good your reasons are.

K-DOT

(already walking in)
I'll take fifteen and call it a win.

CUT TO:

INT. SISTER ROSALIND'S PARISH OFFICE – DAY

[p. 56]

SISTER ROSALIND OKONJO, 40s, in the plain, unhurried habit of someone who has never once needed to raise her voice to be obeyed, sits across from the whole group – K-DOT, BENJI, FELICITY – crowded into a small office that smells like coffee and old hymnals.

SISTER ROSALIND

I have moderated a server of forty teenagers for two years without a single serious incident, using nothing but the rules I learned running a church basement.
Do you know why that works?

K-DOT
(genuinely asking)
Why?

SISTER ROSALIND
Because I actually pay attention to people, and Desiree Holloway's entire business model depends on nobody with real power ever doing that to her customers. That is the whole scheme, in one sentence. She is successful because people like us usually don't look closely enough to say so out loud.

FELICITY
So we look closely.

SISTER ROSALIND
(the faintest smile)
I've been looking closely for two years. I was simply waiting for the rest of you to catch up.

CUT TO:

INT. SUMMIT – MAIN STAGE, CONTINUOUS [climax, p. 111]

SISTER ROSALIND stands calmly at center stage, a wireless mic in hand, facing DESIREE HOLLOWAY directly rather than the stunned crowd.

SISTER ROSALIND
I'm not here to tell ten thousand people they were foolish for believing you. I'm here to tell you, directly, that I've watched you work for five months now, and you are genuinely, remarkably good at making people feel seen for the first time in their lives.

DESIREE
(wrong-footed by the gentleness of it)
...Thank you.

SISTER ROSALIND
That wasn't a compliment. That was a diagnosis. You found something real that people are starving for, and you turned it into a bill. That's not abundance. That's just a very well-lit hunger, and I would like everyone in this room to go home and actually be seen by someone who isn't charging them for it.

Silence. Then, from somewhere in the crowd, the first phone comes out – someone, quietly, joining THE OUTPOST's public beta right there in their seat.

CUT TO:

STINGER

INT. DESIREE'S NEW OFFICE, UNMARKED — DAY

A bare, half-furnished office. DESIREE HOLLOWAY stands at a whiteboard, marker in hand, entirely unbothered by the events of the last several weeks. She's written and crossed out several names: "RADIANT PATH." "THE ASCENSION CIRCLE." "TRUE NORTH COLLECTIVE."

An ASSISTANT enters with coffee.

ASSISTANT

The lawyers say we're clear to relaunch under a new entity in ninety days.

DESIREE

(studying the whiteboard, unbothered)
Good. Ninety days is enough time for people to forget the specifics and remember the feeling. The feeling's the product. It was always the product.

She circles a new name: "LUMINOUS."

DESIREE (CONT'D)

There it is.

FADE OUT.

THE END.
